RE: Promotional Writing Styles

Several types of promotional writing are used in Marketing, Advertising, Public Relations, and on social media. Below are descriptions and examples of three types of promotional writing styles: straight news writing, feature writing, and persuasive writing.

Straight News Writing

This form of writing is used to inform the reader of any upcoming news or events. Straight news writing is factual, includes hard news writing, and includes quotes, and facts about the subject. An inverted pyramid format is used for straight new writing for articles, and can also be used to write press releases. The tone of this form of writing depends on the subject of the press release or newspaper article.

Feature Writing

This form of writing is used to inform and entertain the reader. Feature writing is used in magazines, and changes according to the subject matter. Leads in feature writing are creative in a way that it pulls the reader in with emotion and storytelling. The quotes and characters in feature writing tell the story. Examples of feature writing include blogs, tweets, Public Service Announcements (PSAs), brochures, and feature releases.

Persuasive Writing

This form of writing is used to get the reader to act. Persuasive writing causes a reader to purchase items to show support or give back to a cause. The reader's behavior changes based on the cause that is presented to them. Persuasive writing serves as a call-to-action. Examples of persuasive writing are all types of advertisements.

Dear [NAME],

As you approach the end of your junior year at New Jersey City University, you are asked what you are planning to do with your Marketing degree after graduation. Your response would be to work for a marketing or public relations firm. If you declared Public Relations as your concentration with your major, you can take courses that can prepare you to take an exam and a Public Relations certificate through the Public Relations Student Society of America (PRSSA).

The Certificate in Principles of Public Relations gives new graduates an advantage in a competitive job market, and encourages them to pursue an Accreditation in Public Relations, when they have enough professional experience to do so.

Every Spring, free three-hour courses are instructed three Saturdays in April at Monmouth University. The qualifications to attend the Certificate in Principles of Public Relations are the following:

- Must be a public relations major and have a faculty member certify that he/she is a public relations major
- Must be within six months of graduation, before or after
- Must be a member of PRSSA
- Must take a formal preparatory course
- Must pay $125 exam fee, plus a $25 membership fee

Former Marketing student, Nicole Ortiz, attended the courses last year and passed the exam to receive her Public Relations certificate. Nicole is currently studying to earn her accreditation.

If you would like to receive more information about the PRSSA courses and Certification in Principles of Public Relations, contact Dr. Kathleen Rennie at kathdrenn@aol.com.

Sincerely,

Amber Vaughn

BUG EXHIBIT OPENS AT THE BRONX ZOO

Visitors See How Bugs Impact Environment

SEPTEMBER 11, 2017 – The Bronx Zoo will host a grand opening of its new “Bugged Out” exhibit on Sunday, October 1, 2017 at 9 a.m. Rare bugs such as North American butterflies and moths, a working colony of leaf-cutter ants, giant millipedes, centipedes, and land crabs are included in the exhibit.

During the grand opening, Actor Jeff Goldblum, who turned into an insect in the horror movie “The Fly,” will give a special demonstration titled “Flies: Food for Thought” at 12 p.m. Jennifer Borland, entomologist, will present a demonstration each day at 2 p.m.

“Thousands of live bugs will be creeping and crawling so visitors will not only be entertained, but also learn about the impact bugs have on all of us,” said Sarah Olson, Bronx Zoo director. “Up to 600 free-flying butterflies and moths will be feeding, resting, and emerging as adult butterflies.”

“The really neat thing [to learn in this exhibit] is that bug feces actually play a huge role in promoting healthy bacteria growth, which is good for the environment,” said Borland, entomologist. “Bug poop is all around us. We just can’t see it.”

The Bronx Zoo is open from Monday through Sunday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. The cost to get in the zoo is $7 for adults and $3 for children under 12.

The Bronx Zoo opened in 1925 with 15 animals and a Ferris Wheel ride. Today, the zoo has more than 6,000 creatures on more than 200 acres of land. For more information, visit www.bronxzo.org.

Laser Scanning Applications in Building Restoration

By Amber Vaughn and Alyssa Somohano

The use of laser scanning in architecture became a topic of conversation across the world following the fire that ravaged the Notre Dame cathedral on April 15th of this year. Following this tragic event, it was discovered that art historian Andrew Tallon had begun working in 2010 to create a three-dimensional digital map of the cathedral, inside and out. This extremely detailed map will no doubt be invaluable to the rebuilding of the structure, as it will allow the restoration team access to accurate measurements and photographs of the cathedral as it was prior to the fire.

Laser scanning is used to create a digital, three-dimensional representation of real-life objects. It does so by shooting laser beams at the object and recording the amount of time it takes for the beam to shoot back, thereby measuring the distance of the object. This process is repeated for every point on the object, finding the accurate position of each pixel and mapping them to create what is known as a "point cloud." The point cloud data, a digital map of all the points of the object, can be entered into virtually any 3D drawing program and turned into a replica of the object or space that was scanned.

This technology is beginning to be used more frequently in construction, with specific applications in historic restoration. Laser scanning can be beneficial in these projects as it is a more "hands-off" approach than traditional methods of surveying and can allow for measurements at parts of the structure that may not otherwise have been accessible. Laser scanning can also allow for more precise measurements in a shorter amount of time than typical surveying methods might take.

Additionally, as with Notre Dame, the scanning process will create an accurate replica of the structure, which would be a valuable source of information in the event of an unexpected disaster that may damage the building. Scanning can also be used to measure change in the structure over time, whether it be to monitor erosion or structural stability, or to preserve accurate historical records of the structure throughout history.

If you have questions about how laser scanning can be beneficial for your structure, contact Diaz Architect & Associates at \(212\) 730-2240.
